Behind and alongside the polemics of modernism is a transformation of the architect’s relationship to industry that goes beyond issues of aesthetics or even the management of work on site, to give them a new role in the expansion of manufacture.

Dr Katie Lloyd Thomas is lecturer in Architecture at Newcastle University where she co-directs ARC, the Architecture Research Collaborative, and is an editor of the international journal arq.

AA Visiting School

Graduate Gallery

Launched in Dubai in early 2008, the AA Visiting School (AAVS) has grown into a network of more than 50 annual courses scattered across the globe, from Buenos Aires to London, New York to Hong Kong and onto the Amazon Rainforest and Atacama Desert. Encompassing five continents and countless cultures, AAVS courses take participants on unimaginable journeys to engage with many of the world’s most pressing architectural, technological, cultural, urban and social issues.

AAVS is concerned with architectural education in its widest possible conception and offers four kinds of courses: a Semester Programme for visiting students to study alongside AA students in the Undergraduate School; the Summer School, Night School and other short courses organised at the AA in Bedford Square and in Hooke Park; Little Architect, which introduces an awareness of architecture and cities to schoolchildren across London; and an array of Global Schools abroad. Courses are modelled on the AA’s famed unit system with individual agendas relating to the particular geographic and cultural conditions of each setting.

AAVS programmes offer participants the rare opportunity to engage with local forms of expertise and provide the unique kind of globalised learning experience relevant to architectural education in the twenty-first century.

AA Media Lunchtime Talk

Thomas Pearce
Orchestrating the Edge: On Schizophrenic Points and Indecisive Photons
Friday 15 May, 1.00

As the human eye is displaced by a plethora of post-human vision we feel bypassed and uncomfortably decentralised. Our reaction is desperate anthropomorphism. This talk will traverse the point cloud as a psychological projection plane, crossing orders of magnitude from the anxious mesh to the schizophrenic point, from the nostalgic pixel to the indecisive photon. Thomas Pearce will address techniques that challenge the realism and accuracy of the 3D scanner and engage its post-human eye as a creative complicit to create the high-tech hallucinations of an engineered point cloud surrealism.
